Leader Of The Pack

Resolution: Become better pet guardians

In our submissive moments we'll undertake even the most challenging of commands. After letting high-profile dog trainer Jennifer McCarthy command us like a pro, we were left a little turned on, and a lot confused.

As you may have gathered from her name, yes, Jennifer is a woman. And no, we aren't going Bi List Daily on you.

We're just infatuated. McCarthy didn't merely train our pooches; she also whipped us into outstanding pet-guardian shape.

We haven't been whipped into shape by a dominant hot chick since our drunken experimental days in college.

Friends had referred us to the nationally-recognized canine genius after we incessantly complained about our own aggressive dogs.

Within a half hour, McCarthy had whispered the rough edges right out of our pooches, transforming them into works of submission. She then turned to our lifestyle, assuring us that we had to stop being such nelly princesses, and reveal the dominant, alpha-males within.

A few hours later, at Akbar with champagne in hand, we worked to surface our inner-tops. You know, for the benefit of our dogs.

But it's not all rose-colored bubbly.

McCarthy had set some explicit lifestyle-changing rules that we've been working hard to achieve, to help our dogs recognize the true leader of the pack, girl.

Weeks later, and we're still giving trying our hardest to remain as alpha as possible and the pooches seem to be buying the act.

We wish we would've met McCarthy sooner. The out (and hot) lesbian revolutionized our household and transformed us into domineering alpha males - a feat even voodoo and hormone therapy hadn't been able to achieve.
